After I have the object I need to assign a new value to a property of one of the objects in the list. I am using entity framework. Here is a simplified example. var example1 = context.Examples.FirstOrDefault(); var example2 = context.Examples.FirstOrDefault(); example1.Name = "example 1"; example2.Name = "example 2"; var result = context.Examples.Where(x => x.Name == example1.Name).FirstOrDefault(); The first line of the above example is fine, however the result of the second line is: 'Example' does not contain a definition for 'Name' and no extension method accepting a first argument of type 'Example' could be found (are you missing a using directive or an assembly reference?) If I assign the new property to example1 the same error occurs. I am sure there must be a simple solution to this, but after a couple of hours I am getting desperate. A: You need to call the ToList method to create a list with the added values; var example1 = context.Examples.FirstOrDefault(); var example2 = context.Examples.FirstOrDefault(); example1.Name = "example 1"; example2.Name = "example 2"; var result = context.Examples.Where(x => x.Name == example1.Name).ToList().FirstOrDefault(); Analysis: Thai Regulators On Verge Of The 2nd Government Collapse In A Decade Rikafuri is a Tambon (Sub-district) in the Phisai District of Thailand's Surat Thani Province. It is known as the "Wild Elephant Back Road" as it is a scenic route in Surat Thani Province connecting to Hua Hin to the north and Khon Kaen to the south. Local
